the Central and South China Military Area Command in Hankow received from the North China Military Area Command a total of 180 ordnance experts and technicians, including some Germans and Russians.

50X1-HUM

all of these were working on the design and manufacture of weapons at the Hanyang (114-14, 30-31) Arsenal, including a design for a new type of light and rapid firing rifle which was still in the experimental stage. Most of the old machinery of this arsenal was recently replaced by modern machinery of Soviet manufacture.
 This arsenal was operating 24 hours daily and manufacturing weapons and ammunition, including 60 mm shells and also heavy and light machine guns in small quantities, from materials received from the USSR
